CASE STUDY: We don't have a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame (yet) but Vermont Natural Coatings is shining brightly in one of the most prestigious galleries in Los Angeles. Our PolyWhey® Floor, Furniture and Exterior finishes are featured prominently in the Samuel Freeman Gallery in the Culver City section of Los Angeles.

"We're extraordinarily pleased with the way the natural beauty of the floors was enhanced and preserved with Vermont Natural Coatings," said gallery owner Samuel Freeman. "Our gallery is all about environment on so many levels and we're certainly fortunate to have found an environmentally safe, high performance product that meets are very demanding standards."

Founded in 1979, Samuel Freeman, LLC has been a mainstay of the Los Angeles fine art community for 33 years. Under the original name of Asher/Faure and subsequently as the Patricia Faure Gallery, Freeman specializes in contemporary painting and sculpture. The gallery name was changed to Samuel Freeman in 2008 and in 2011, Freeman announced he was moving the gallery from Santa Monica to his newly constructed 4,200 square feet space in Culver City.

Vermont Natural Coatings recently broke with the coatings industry to support a California Supreme Court decision upholding stringent air quality safety regulations for coatings, including wood finishes.

"We're extraordinarily pleased with the way the natural beauty of the floors was enhanced and preserved with Vermont Natural Coatings."
